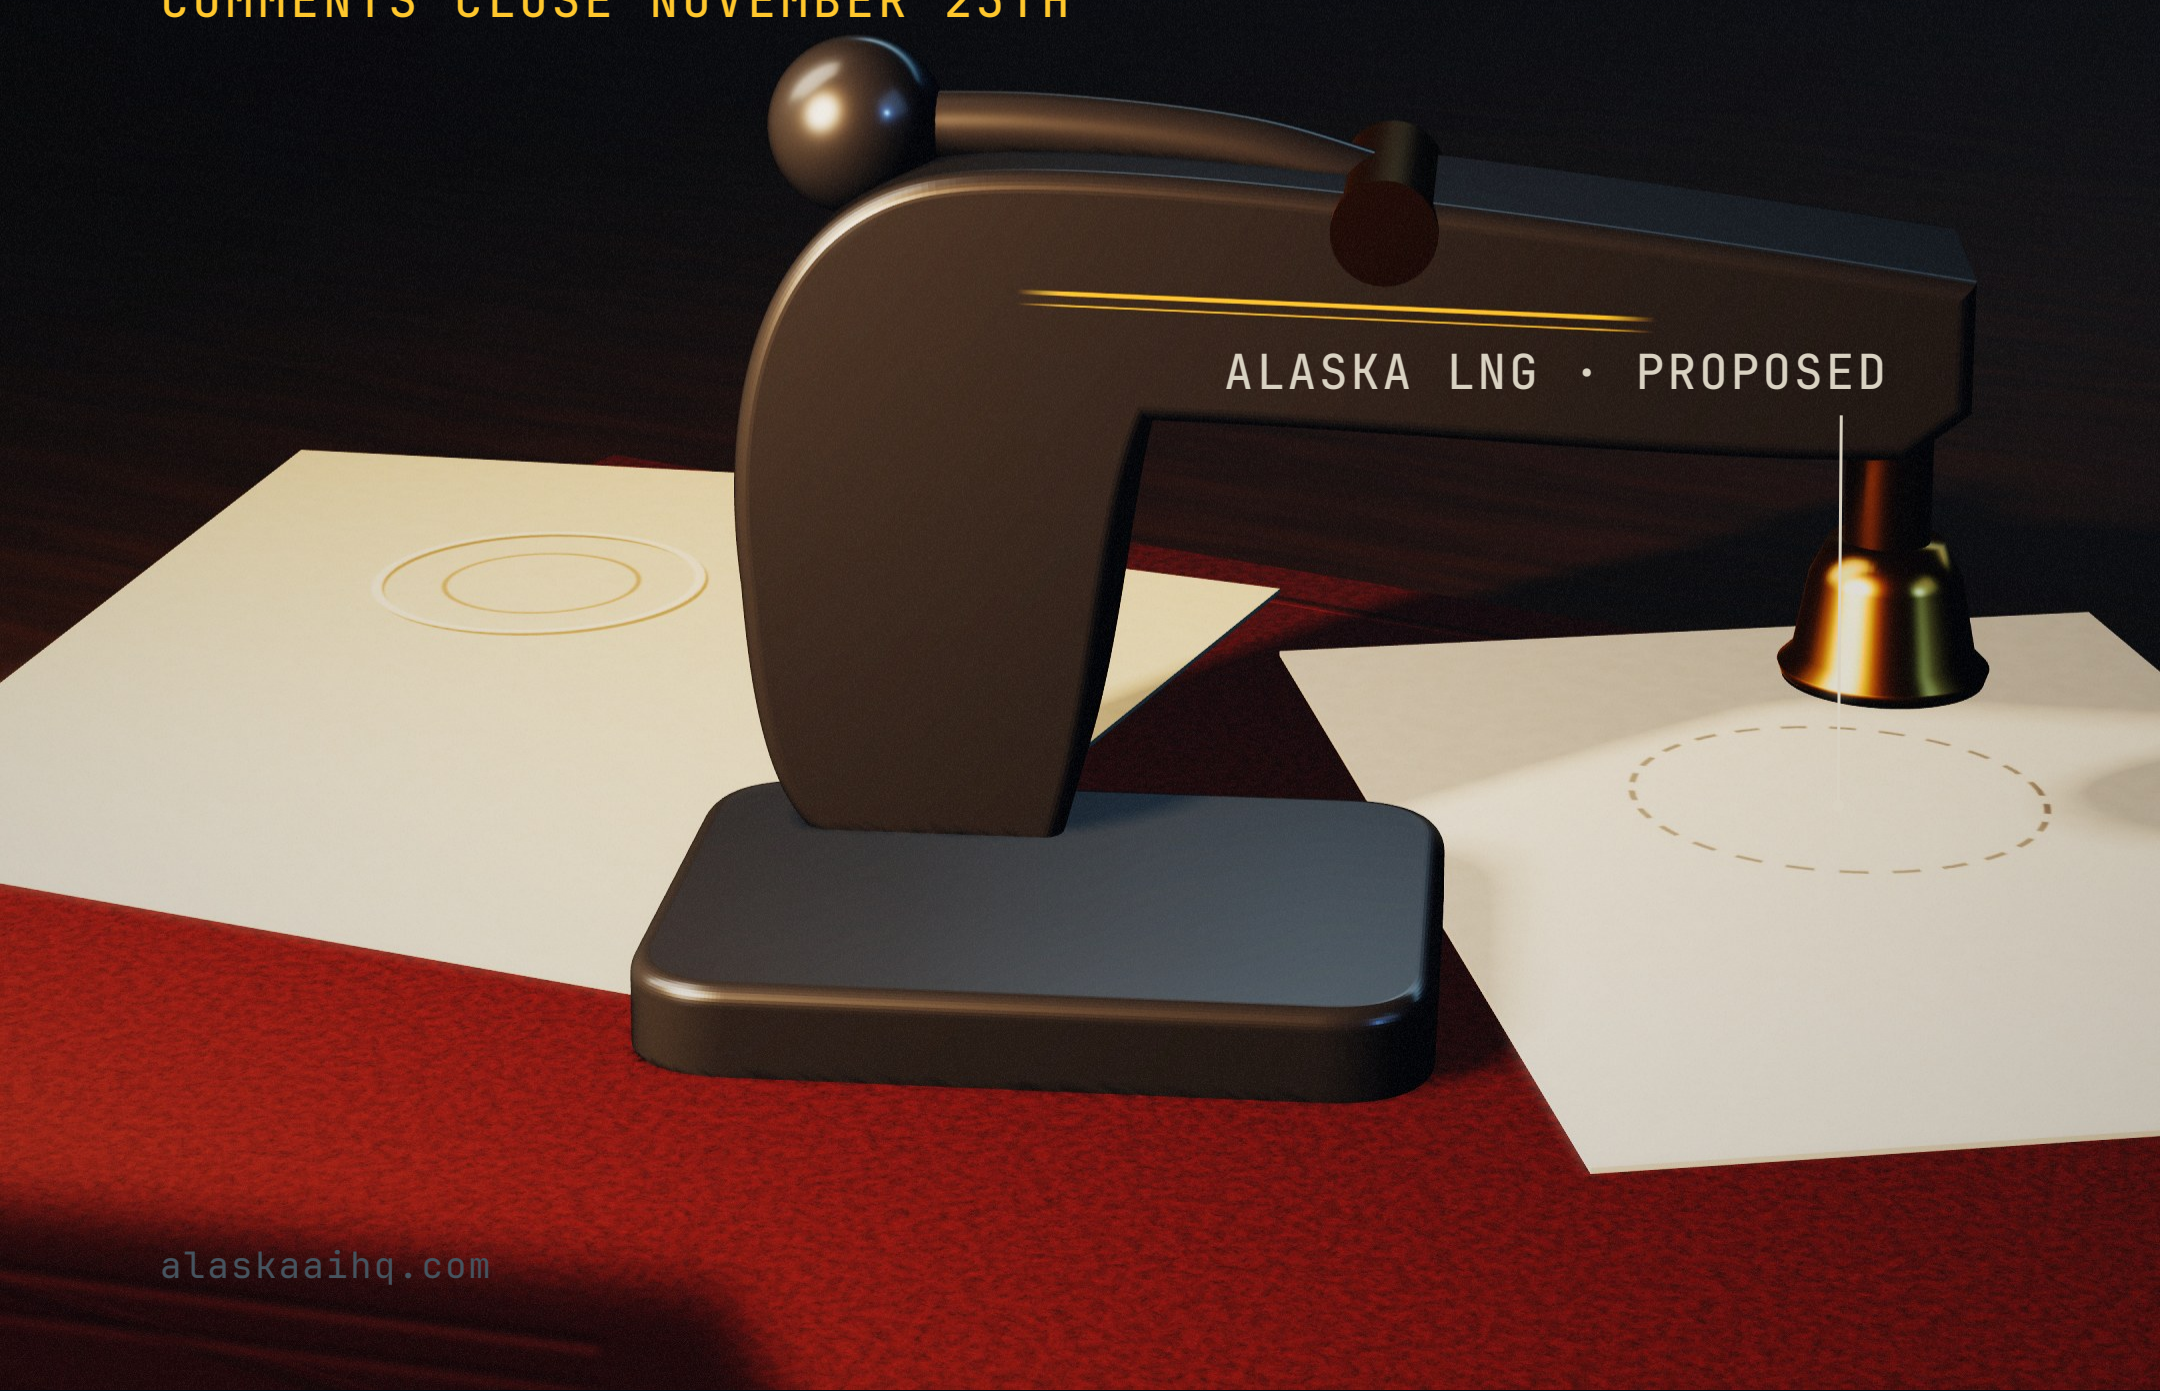
Two land rights decided. One still open.

COMMENTS CLOSE NOVEMBER 25TH



Two are pressed. One is still a circle.

DNR approved a 50-year North Slope data center lease and, on November 10th, published its decision conveying about 6,800 acres near Houston to AIDEA. Its proposed decision on Alaska LNG's 800-mile corridor still takes comment.

"It's hard to look at that and not call this rushed."

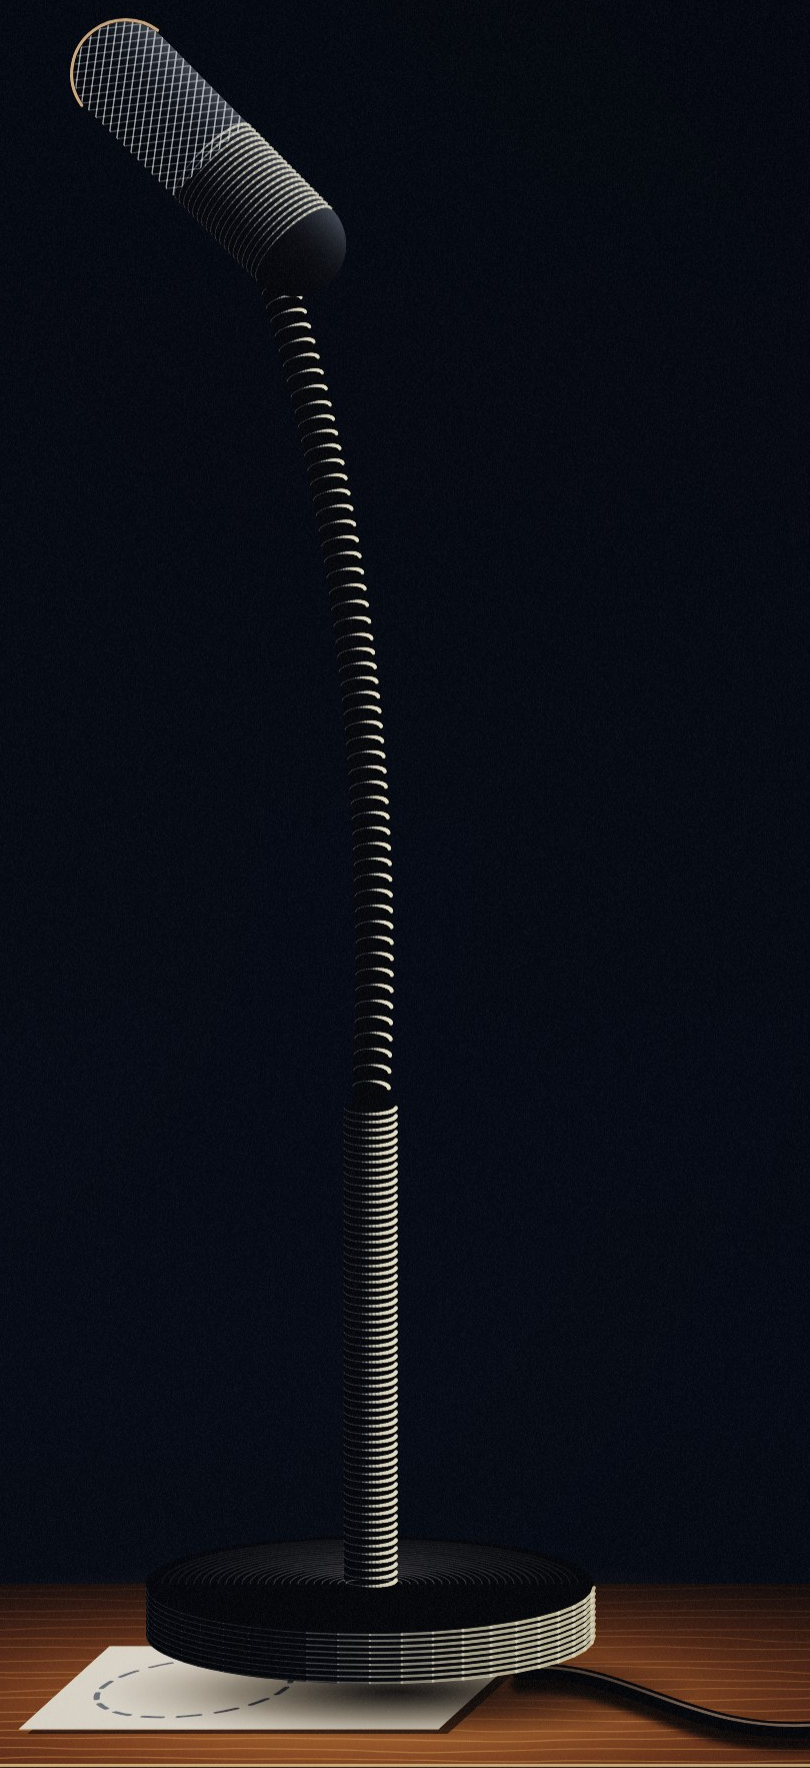
SEN. CATHY GIESSEL

"What's the rush?"

SEN. BILL WIELECHOWSKI

DNR is "doing our best to advance (the decision) as expeditiously as we can."

COMMISSIONER JOHN CROWTHER, DNR



A full lease is not a permit to build.

DNR proposes turning the line's conditional leases into full ones. Its own text says conversion "does not grant AGDC permission to start construction," and every condition stays a gate at a later step.

FULL LEASE, PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION

Part of the case is in a sealed envelope.

DNR cites planned capitalization of more than $50 billion and letters of intent for more than 60 percent of capacity, which it calls non-binding. The Department of Revenue's economics analysis is confidential. Per ADN, Crowther acknowledged departing from DNR's normal process.

6,800 acres to AIDEA. The borough wants it elsewhere.

DNR's decision conveys about 6,800 acres, down from almost 20,000 first proposed. On November 13th the Mat-Su Borough asked DNR to reconsider and named Point MacKenzie.

Both decided over heavy opposition.

North Slope, a 50-year lease on about 715 acres for a 1 to 3 gigawatt data center, drew more than 1,200 responses, most opposed. Houston drew more than 2,300 comments, almost all opposed. Each decision now has a reconsideration window.

ONE QUESTION

10 / 10

Should DNR's decision on the gas line leases wait for the next governor?
