Anchorage got a daily paper on July 8th.

More than 500 articles followed, July 8th to July 26th. The masthead reads "Local News, Anchorage. Every Day." It says it publishes daily.

It told you.

"A human editor reviews flagged content before publication."

The standards page says articles are produced under human oversight. The about page says it discloses AI involvement on every page. Both are true.

One story names the Dena'ina Convention Center and two real downtown addresses. All three check out. Then it sources its largest dollar figure to "data cited in coding bootcamp research".

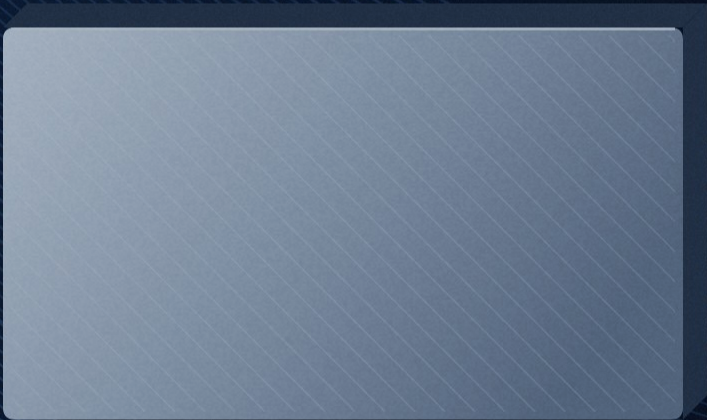

"Details may be imperfect, so please verify anything important."

Disclosure was never the load-bearing part.

This site labeled itself on every page and it changed nothing. Alaska has no enacted election deepfake law. More than 20 states do, per Public Citizen's tracker.
