UPDATE

Notice over numbers.

The 14 days stays police policy, not code.

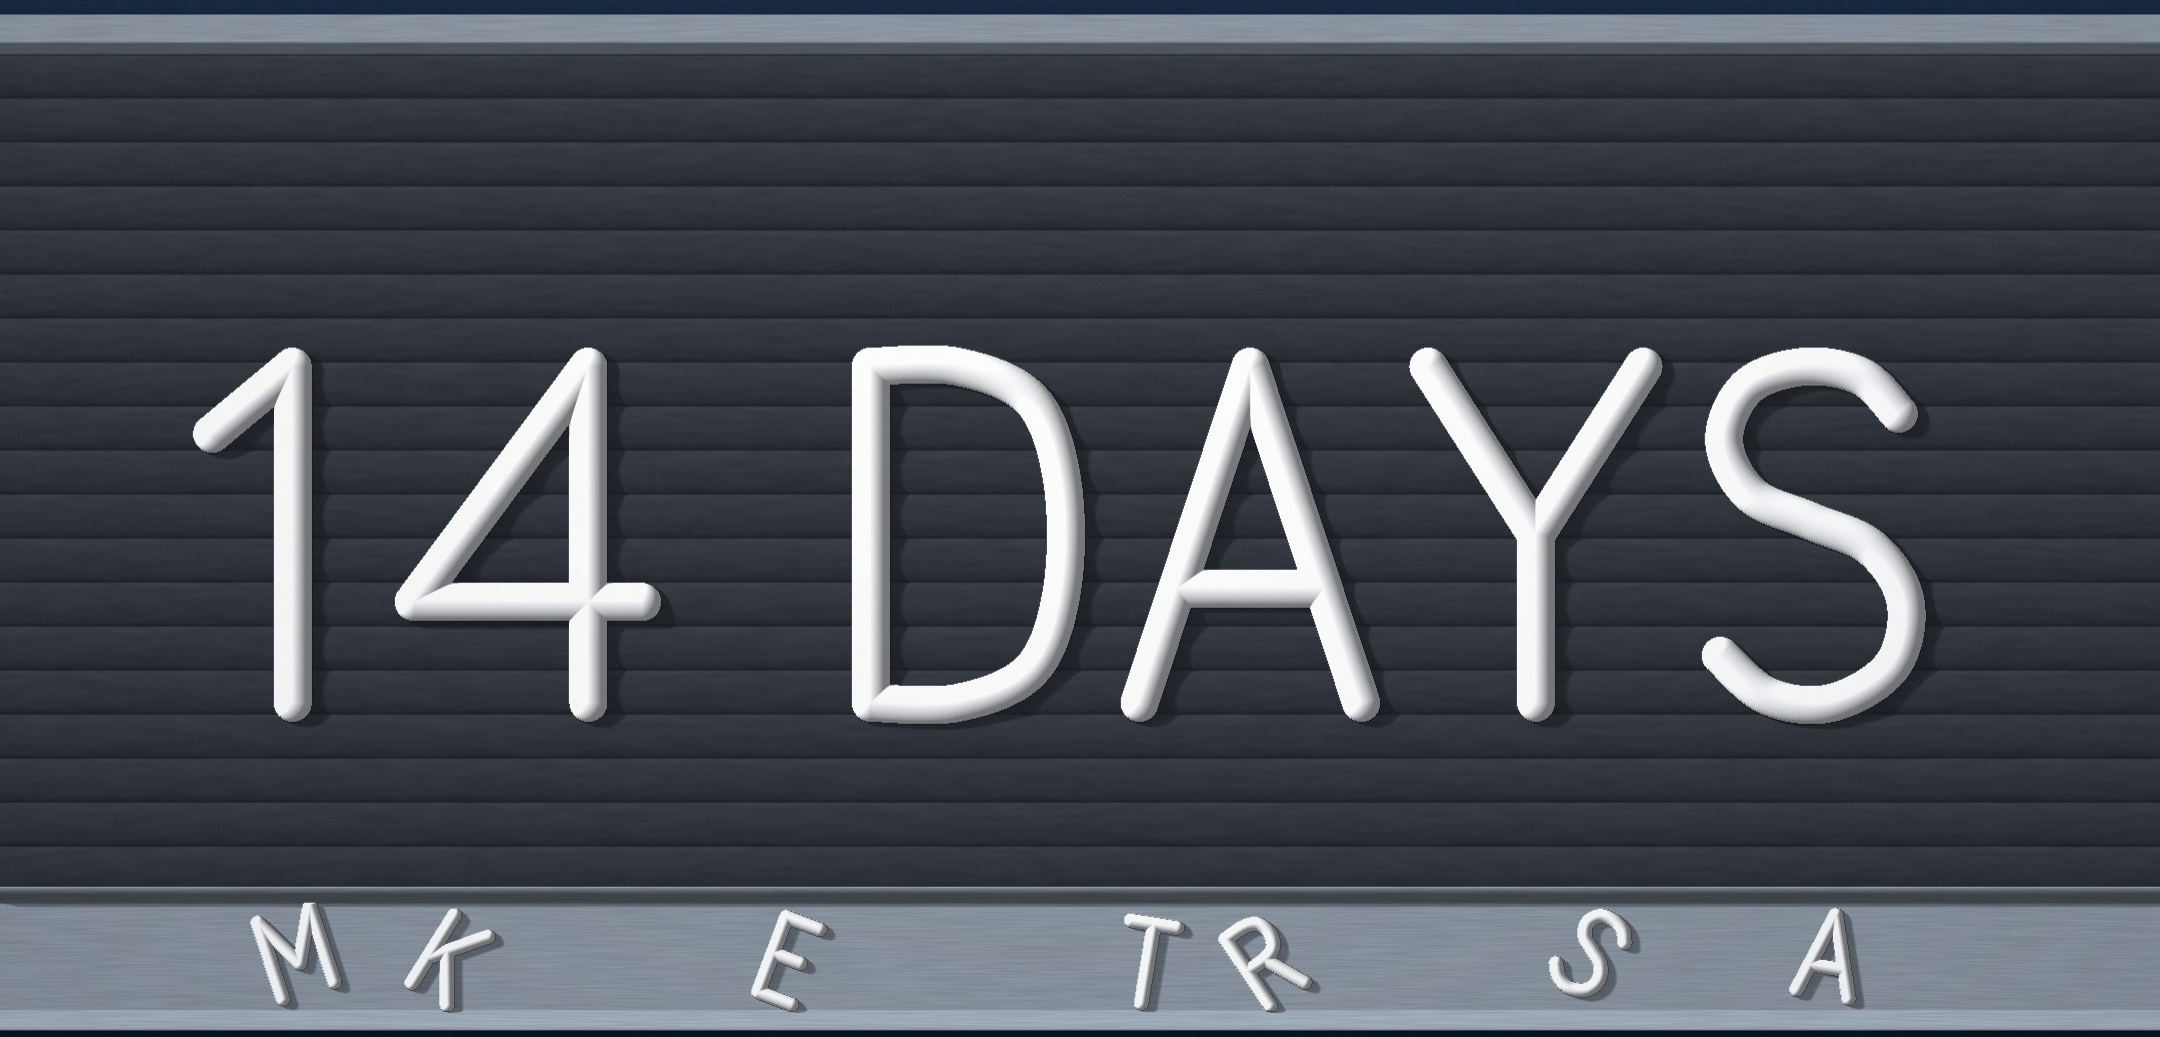

NOVEMBER 4TH, LATE WEDNESDAY

The surveillance rules passed 11 to 1.

An amendment to write a 14-day deletion deadline into city code was rejected. APD already deletes plate reader data after 14 days, under its own department policy.

VOTES PER ALASKA'S NEWS SOURCE · 14 DAYS PER APD

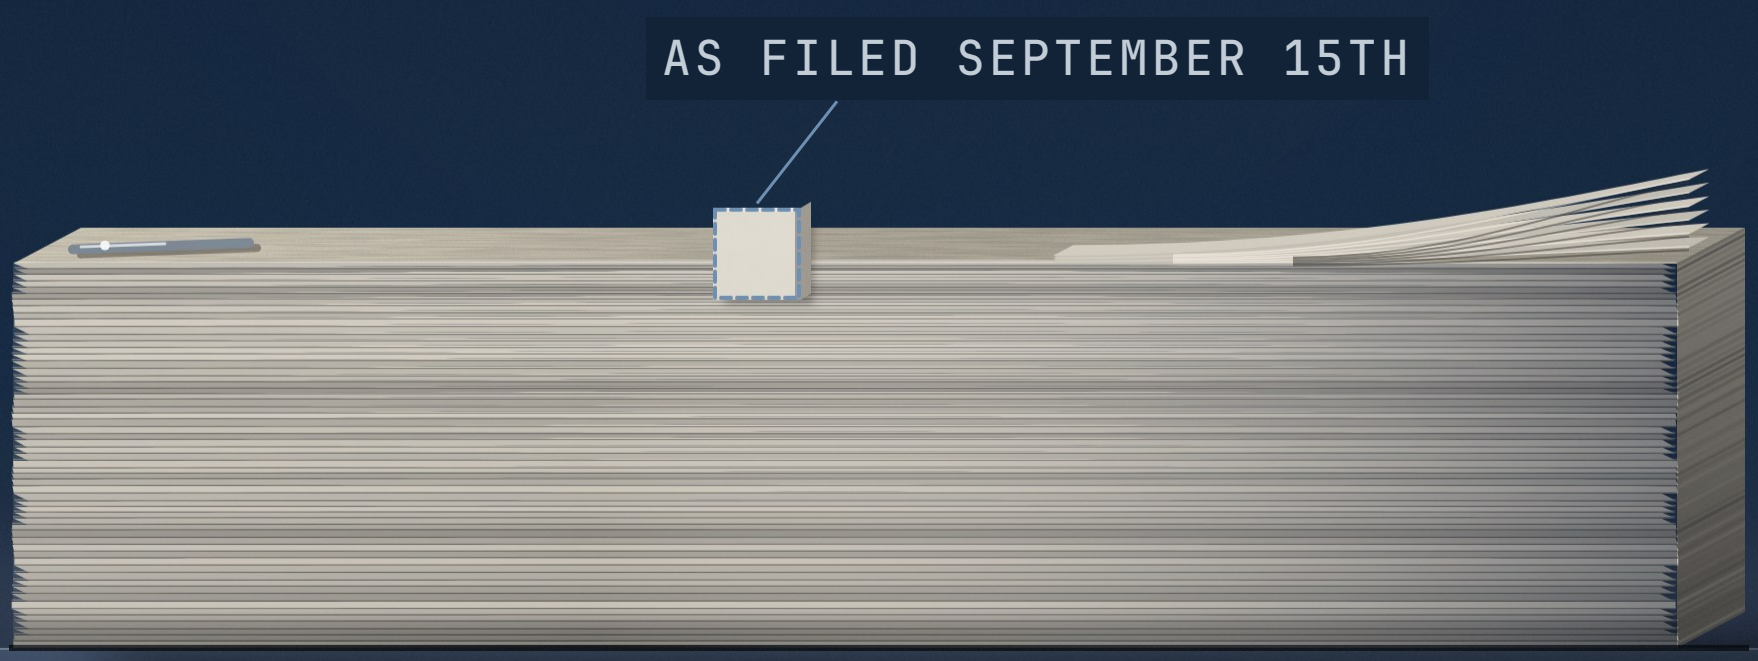

THE WORDS IN PLACE OF A NUMBER

"articulable operational needs"

Municipal Attorney Eva Gardner argued retention must stay adaptable on that standard, per Alaska's

News Source. The substitute as filed September 15th used the same words and set no fixed number of days.

AMENDMENT 12, PASSED UNANIMOUSLY

Thirty days of warning, now before the change.

APD is required to give the Assembly 30 days of advance notice by memo before a material policy change, and a change to data storage limits counts.

A number in code takes an ordinance to change.
A number in APD policy takes a memo and 30 days' notice.

THE RECORD, VOTE BY VOTE

November 4th, in five votes

Final passage, AO 2026-108(S) as amended

11 TO 1

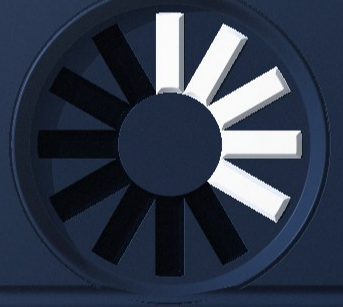

Amendment 5, a 14-day deletion deadline in code

REJECTED, NO TALLY REPORTED

Amendment 11, warrants for past plate searches

5 TO 7, FAILED

Amendment 12, 30 days' notice before changes

UNANIMOUS

A temporary committee to oversee APD policies

10 TO 1

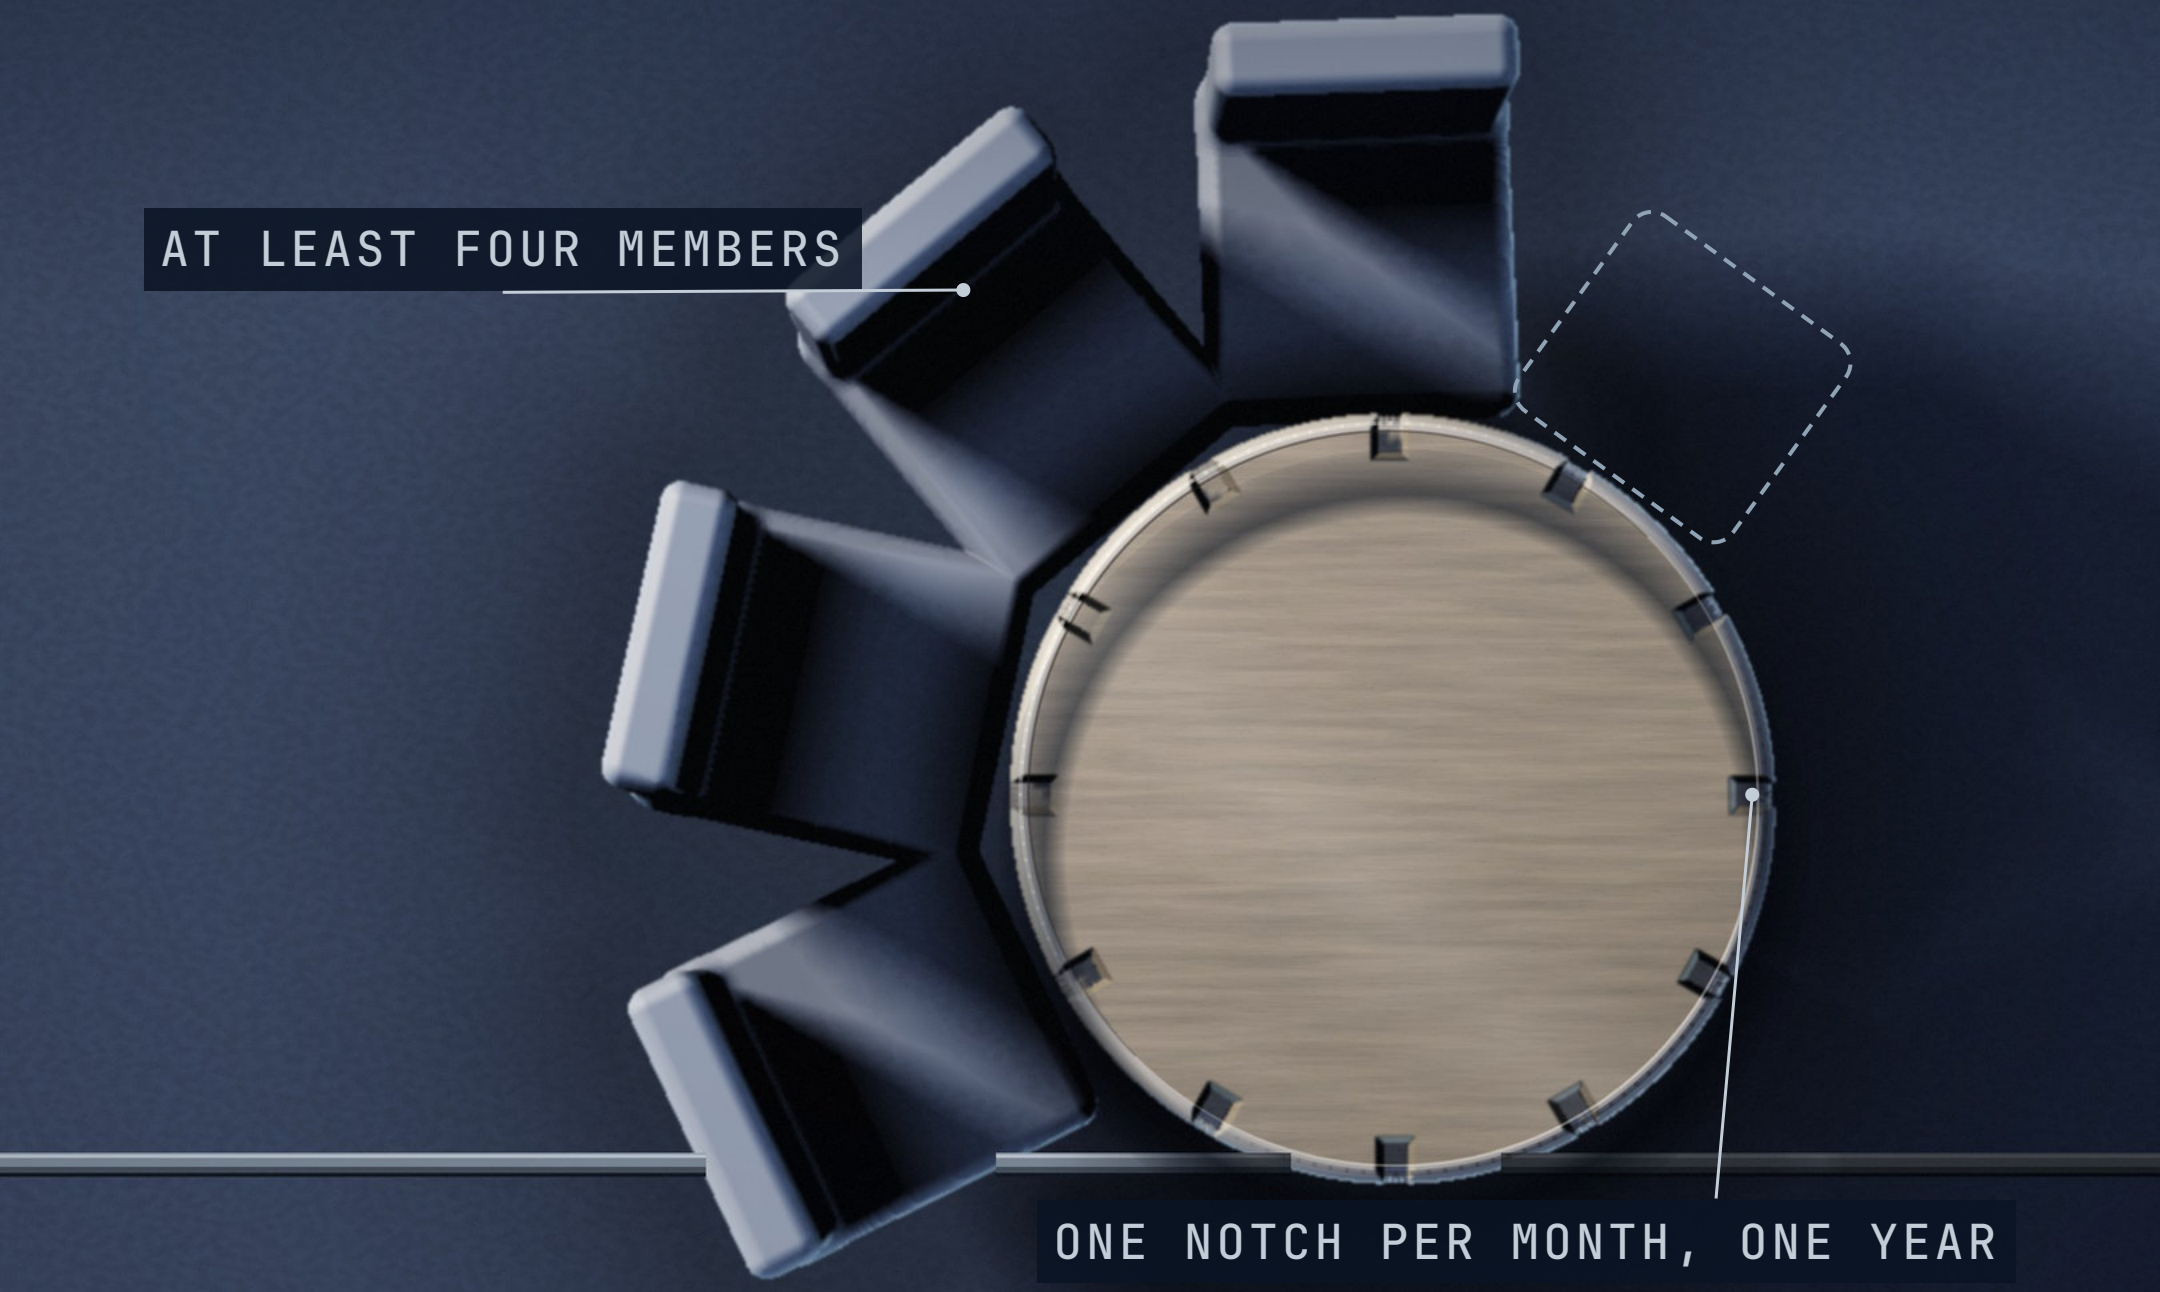

VOTES PER ALASKA'S NEWS SOURCE
COMMITTEE PER ANCHORAGE DAILY NEWS

THE OTHER VOTE, 10 TO 1

A committee to watch the policies, monthly, for a year.

At least four Assembly members, led by Kameron Perez-Verdia, meeting in public at least once a month, per the Anchorage Daily News. It can recommend changes, not discipline.

WHAT THE RULES ARE FOR

"machine learning, artificial intelligence, or similar technology"

AS FILED SEPTEMBER 15TH

That is how the substitute as filed defined surveillance technology. The Anchorage Daily News reports APD now relies more on tools including artificial intelligence used to aid investigations.

Should the 14 days live in code, or is 30 days' notice enough?

