UPDATE / UA REGENTS / AI ENGAGED

Regents pushed the AI vote to February.

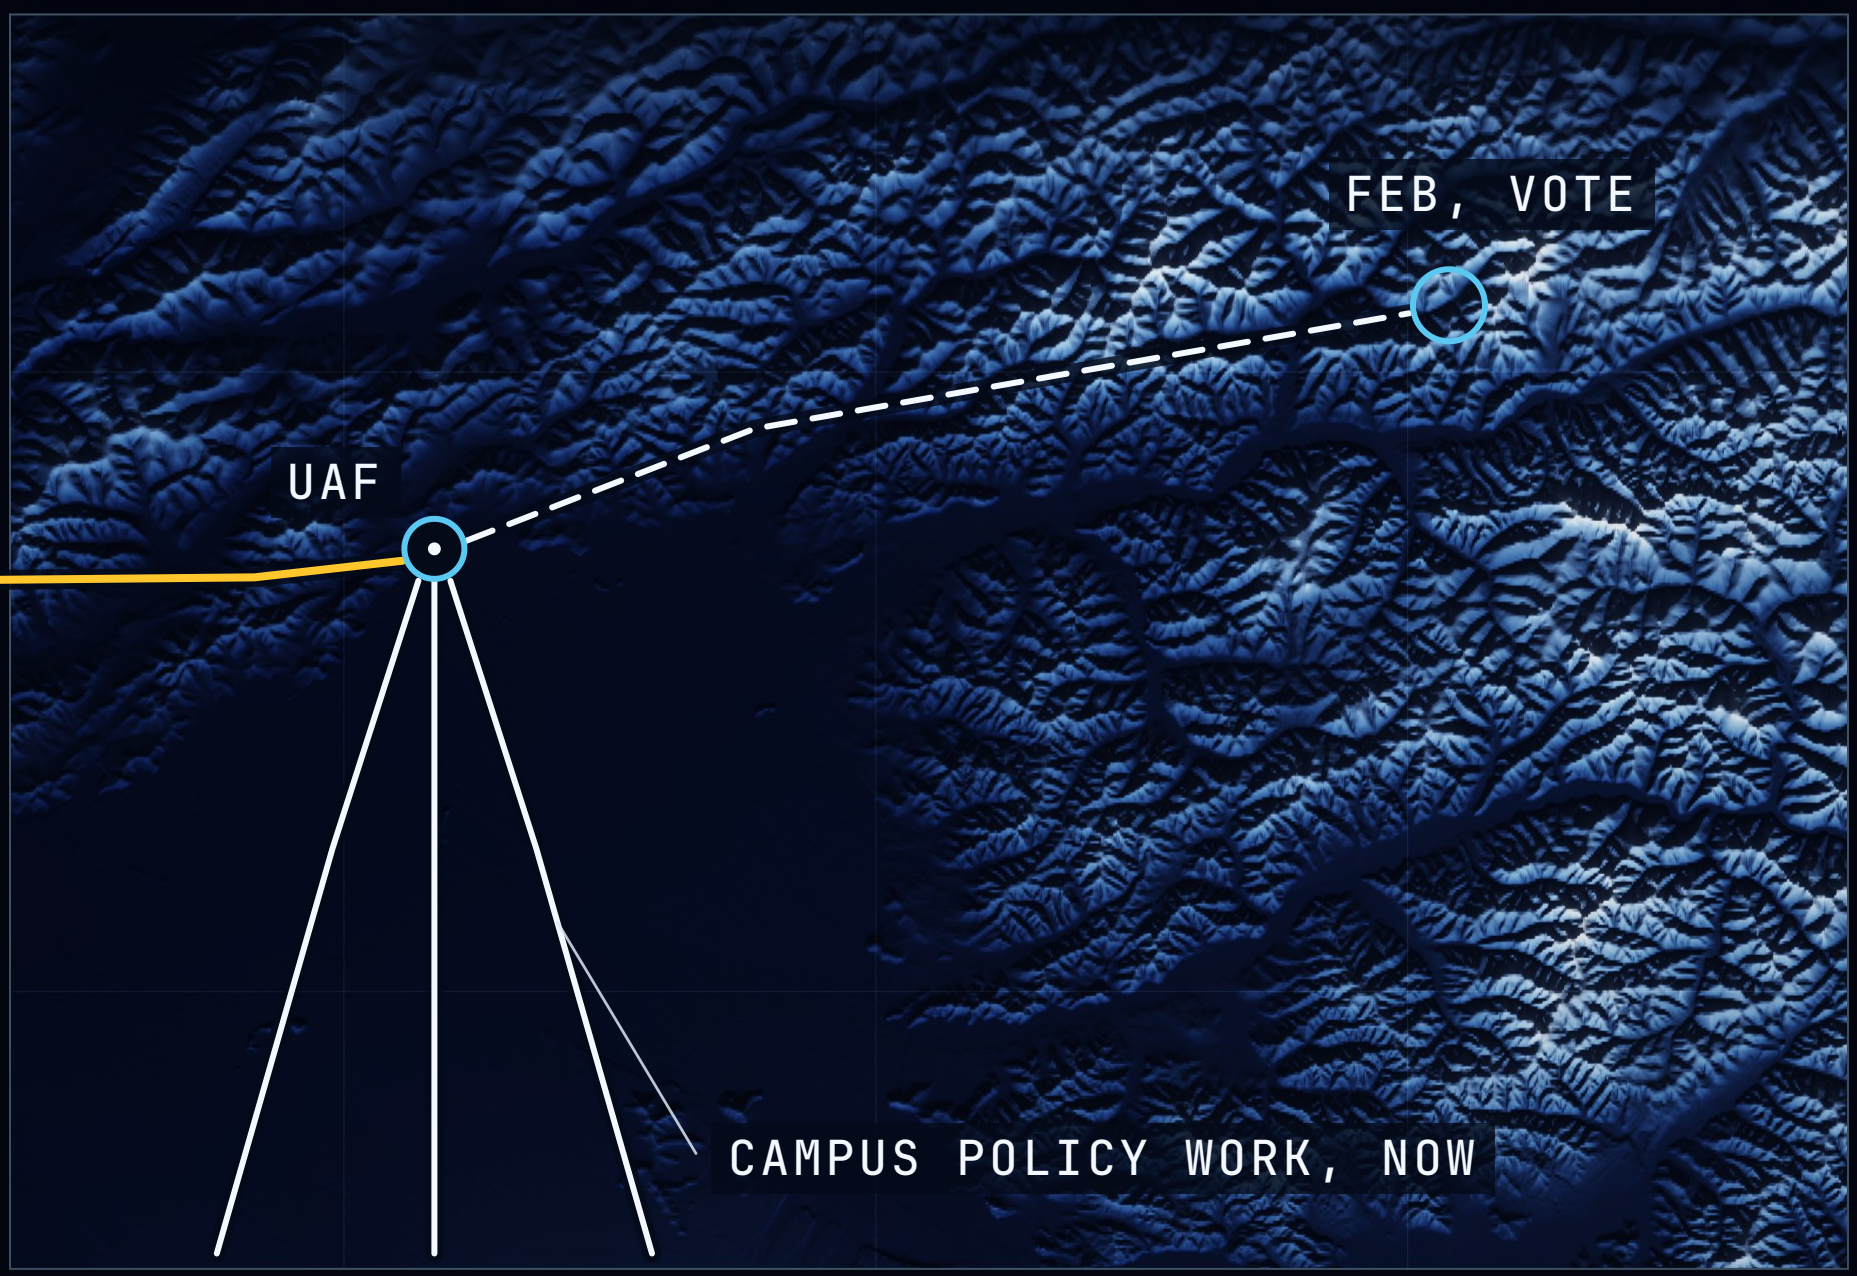

Campus policies start first.

FAIRBANKS / NOVEMBER 4TH TO 6TH

The vote moved. The work didn't.

Meeting at UAF, regents postponed AI Engaged to their February meeting and told the AI Coordinating Council to start campus-specific AI policies in the interim, ADN reports.

WHAT REGENTS WILL VOTE ON

A benchmark, not a law.

AI Engaged is a four-page statement of intent, ADN reports. It doesn't establish policy.

THE FIRST DRAFT

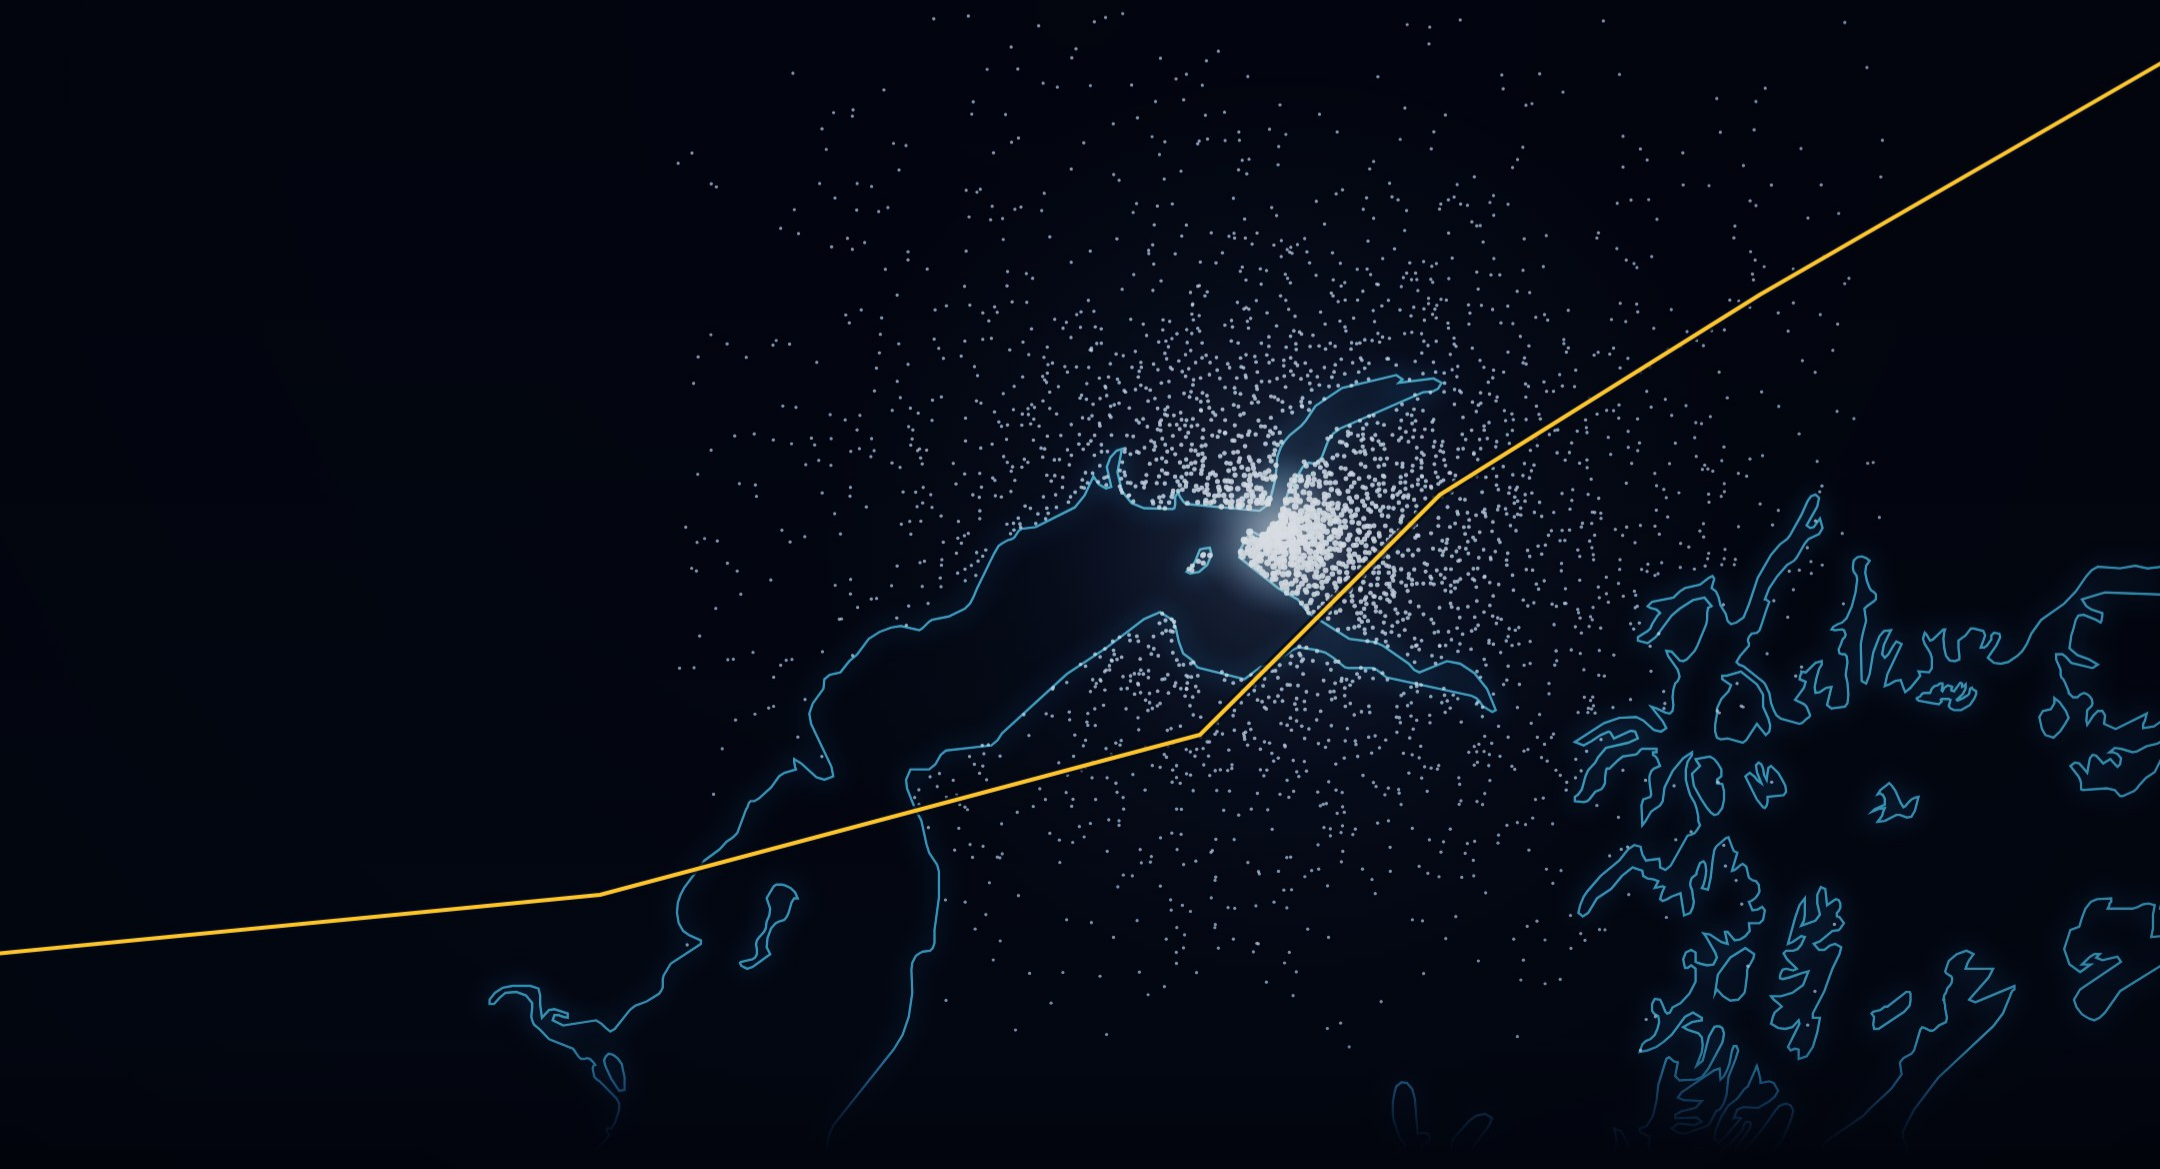

About 20 percent survived, Shier says.

Ben Shier, UA's chief information technology officer, wrote the first draft by prompting Claude with human ideas, "all fed to Claude." He says about 20 percent of that two-page draft survived human edits.

Nearly 200 students and staff asked for a brief statement written by humans.

MOSTLY IN ANCHORAGE, PER ADN

ANCHORAGE

UAA's Faculty Senate paused too.

Senators postponed their vote on a resolution to reject and replace AI Engaged until next month, ADN reports. Senate chair Andrea Dewees said, "I think it's probably going to be messy."

THE ORDER NOW

Campus policies start before the statement.

The statement would require each of the three universities to write its own AI policy. That work now starts first. A one-year clock for a system-wide policy report starts only at adoption.

MAY
Regents direct Shier

OCTOBER 9TH
Claude's role disclosed, critics say

CAMPUS POLICY WORK

NOVEMBER 4TH TO 6TH
Vote postponed

DECEMBER
UAA senate vote, per ADN

UAA UAF UAS

FEBRUARY
Regents vote

ADOPTION
One year to a system policy report

THREE UNIVERSITIES, ONE STATEMENT

The rules get drawn campus by campus.

UA says the statement keeps curriculum, academic integrity and faculty instructional judgment with UAA, UAF and UAS. Cooper says UA is "never going to have everyone on the same page with AI."

Campus rules first, or statement first?

Which order should UA have chosen?
Say so in the comments.

ALASKA.AI